Study Day

Preserving the Nations Heritage - the work of the National Trust 2

16 July 2015

Waddesdon Manor, Aylesbury, Bucks HP18 0JH

Back in 1895, the National Trust was founded with the aim of saving our nation's heritage and open spaces. Today they're still working hard to uphold this aim. They look after historic houses, gardens, mills, coastline, forests, farmland, moorland, islands, castles, nature reserves, villages... and pubs. This work is fascinating and relies upon dedicated professionals as well as a huge number of volunteers and the balance of restoration and preservation is evident in many National Trust properties.

This study day will explore issues associated with looking after heritage and be of interest to U3A members who are also National Trust Members.

The speakers will be:

- Lucy Porten, Curator She has been a Curator with the National Trust for ten years during which time she has provided curatorial advice for Osterley, Cliveden, The Vyne, Basildon Park, Clandon and Hatchlands among others. Before joining the Trust, Lucy worked with the Royal Institute of British Architects Drawing Collection, The Sir John Soane's Museum and The Georgian Group.
- Jane Finch, Steward for the collection at Waddesdon She is a Steward for the collection at Waddesdon, having joined the stewarding team over 20 years ago and has included multitude of tasks and projects in her work, including an MA in furniture conservation restoration, and Decorative arts.
